

How we did it

153 corporate communications professionals surveyed globally

Companies in our sample are headquartered in 19 countries around the world.

Interviewing conducted online April 26 – July 8, 2016.

The following presentation reports Global, North American and EMEA results only due to the small sample sizes for APAC and LatAm. However, APAC and LatAm results are included in the Global findings.

More than four in 10 CCOs report directly to the CEO

| | | Regi | on |
|---|----------------|------------------|------|
| Most senior communications professional reports to | Global CCOs | North America | EMEA |
| | % | % | % |

| Other | 14 | 15 | 11 |

The rate of CCOs reporting directly to the CEO has fluctuated since 2007; is down from 2014

^{*}In previous years, we reported on % of most senior communications professionals who report to the CEO, chair, or vice chair. In 2016, we did not ask about chair or vice chair, so removed these titles from results from past years.

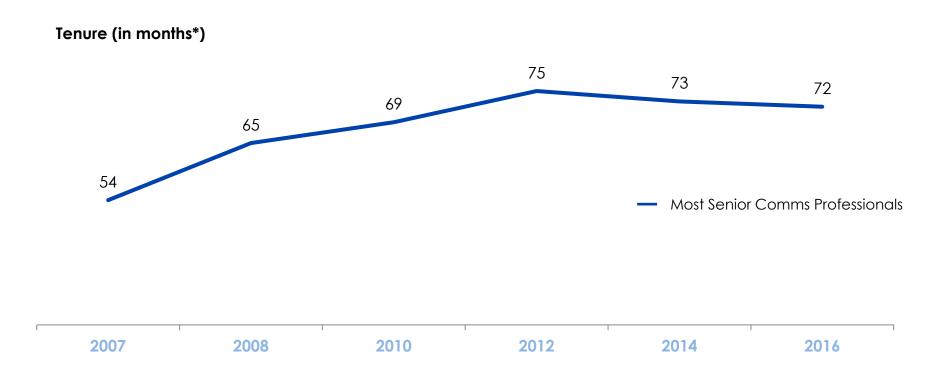

The average tenure for most CCOs is six years

EMEA tenure is about one year longer than North American tenure.

| Tenure among most senior | | Region | | |
|----------------------------------|------------------------|---------------------------------|---------------------------------|--|
| communications professionals | Global CCOs | North America | EMEA | |
| Average time in current position | 72 months (6 years) | 66 months (5 years 6 months) | 77 months (6 years 5 months) | |

[&]quot;The average tenure for chief marketing officers of leading U.S. consumer brand companies dropped from 48 months [4 years] in 2014 to 44 months [3 years, 8 months] in 2015, representing the first decline in average tenure in 10 years." The CMO Today, Spencer Stuart

The average tenure for most CCOs is nearly the same as it was in 2014

CCO responsibilities are highly diverse

| | | Regi | on |

Not surprisingly, nearly every CCO has media relations and/or crisis/reputation management responsibility.

Most North American CCOs are also responsible for internal communications.

More than three-quarters of EMEA CCOs handle social media/digital communications.

Compared to the average CCO, those with responsibility for marketing are more likely to work in EMEA, at B2B companies and at companies with communications budgets of $100 million or more

CCOs expect a growing focus on many different functions over the course of the next 18 months mostly digital communications and reputation management

North American CCOs identify employee advocacy/engagement as their top growth area.

Branding/corporate identity is among EMEA CCOs' top three growth areas.

CCOs work closely with many different departments but see potential benefits to their organizations by working with additional groups

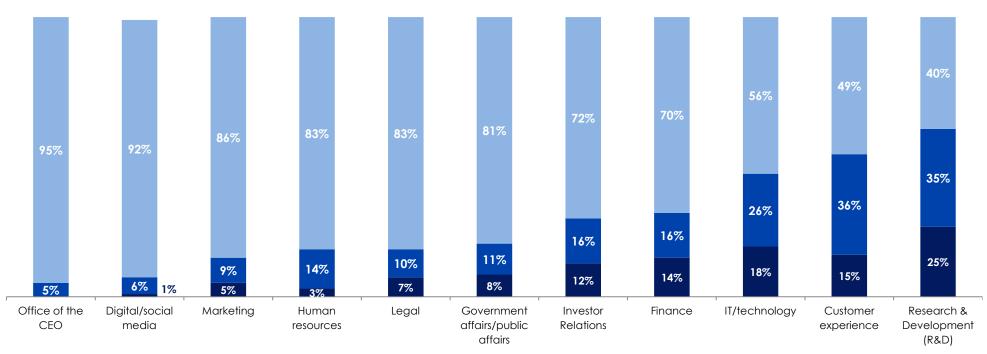

■ Neither

Nearly all CCOs are currently closely working with the CEO and digital/social media department. Other close relationships include marketing, HR, legal and government/public affairs.

More than one-quarter of CCOs believe their companies would benefit by establishing closer relationships with IT/tech, customer experience and R&D.

Relationships with other departments

■ Work closely with now

North American CCOs generally seem to have a wider network of working relationships than EMEA CCOs do

By very wide margins, North American CCOs are more likely to count HR, legal, government affairs, IR, finance, and IT/tech as close partners.

EMEA CCOs are more likely to identify R&D as a department theirs works closely with.

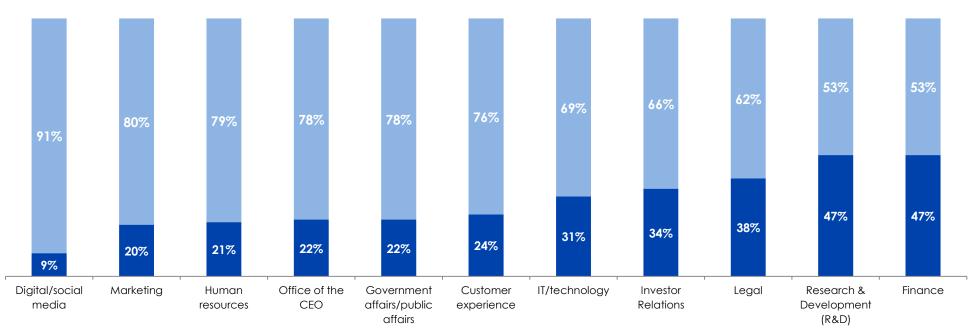

More than one-third of both North American and EMEA CCOs don't work closely with customer experience, but think they would benefit from doing so.

Do not expect to work more closely with over next few years

Expect to work more closely with over next few years

North American and EMEA CCOs alike see digital/social media as their closest working partner in the future

By very wide margins, North American CCOs are more likely to expect the CEO, government affairs, IR, legal, and finance as close future partners.

EMEA CCOs are more likely to identify the customer experience and R&D teams as close future partners.

Consistent with their future partnership expectations, CCOs plan to hire more digital and social media professionals in the near future

CCOs use data analytics for a host of activities, mostly to evaluate company reputation and refine marketing messages

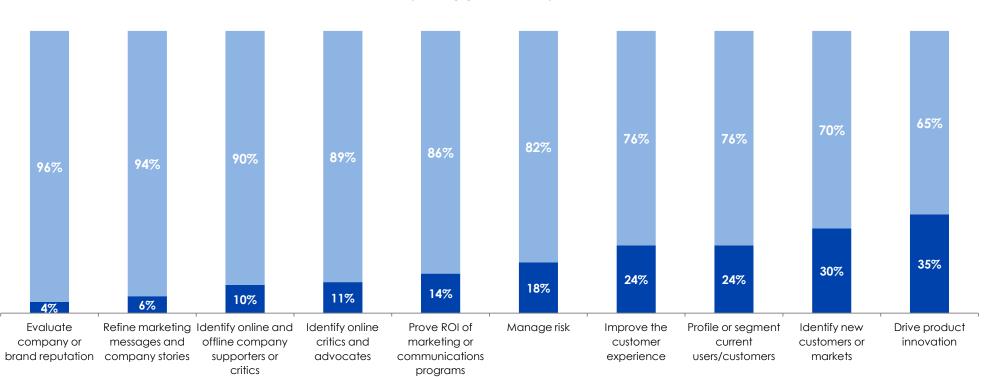

CCOs expect an explosion in the use of data analytics over the next few years

Nearly all CCOs believe that their reliance on data analytics for reputation evaluation and message refinement will grow. Nine in 10 also see application for identifying company advocates and critics.

Use of data analytics 3 years from now

(among global CCOs)

[■] Do not expect to use data analytics for this 3 years from now

Expect to use data analytics for this 3 years from now

North American and EMEA CCOs use data analytics for similar activities and expect generally the same future applications

North American CCOs are more likely than EMEA CCOs to use data analytics for risk management.

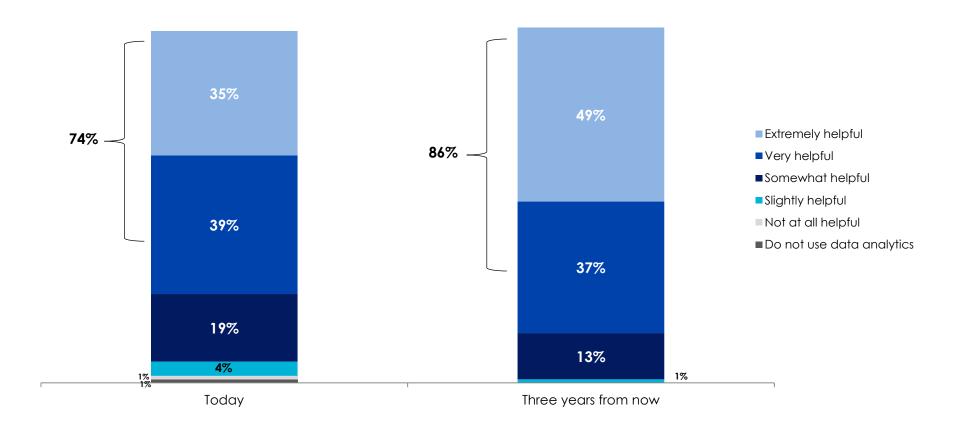

EMEA CCOs are more likely than North American CCOs to use data analytics for identifying new customer or market opportunities. They also are more likely to expect to be using data analytics in their future customer-focused activities.

Approximately three-quarters of CCOs report their companies find data analytics useful today for stakeholder insights, and nearly nine in ten believe the utility will only grow

Helpfulness of data analytics in giving company ability to gain better insights into target audiences' needs, preferences and behaviors (among global CCOs)

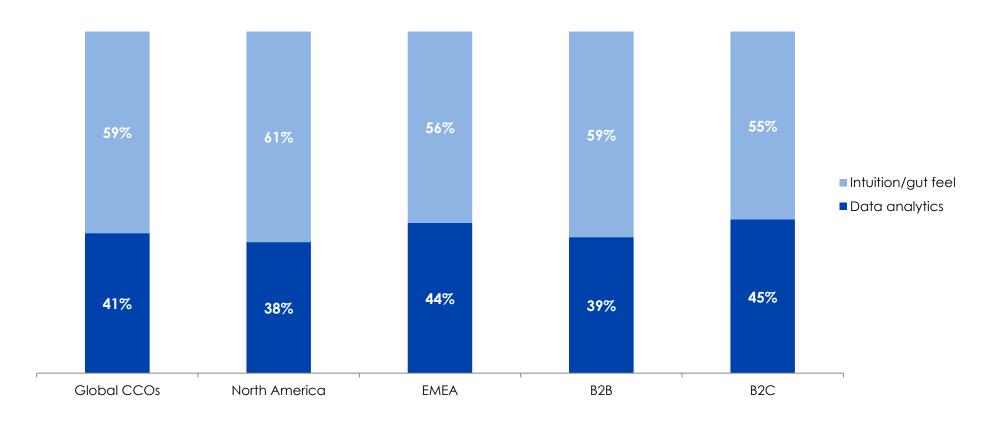

CCOs in both North America and EMEA expect the helpfulness of data analytics to grow

Helpfulness of data analytics in giving company ability to gain better insights into target audiences' needs, preferences and behaviors

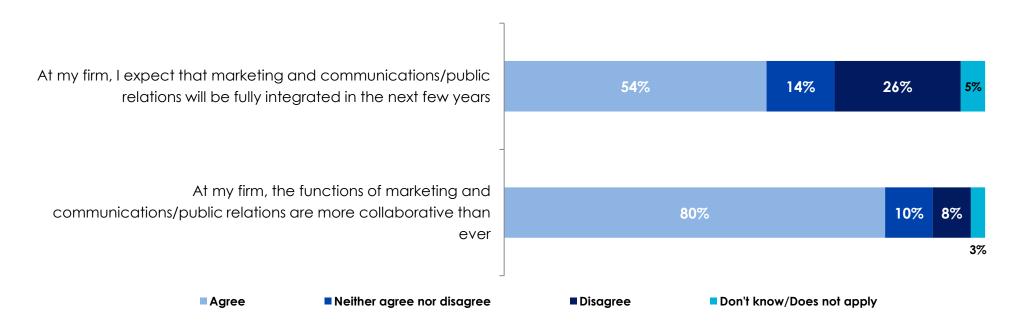

CCOs rely more on their intuition for making business decisions than they do on data analytics

% CCO's decisions made in job today based on data analytics vs. intuition

Note: Some columns do not add to 100%; some respondents provided percentages that did not total to 100%.

More than half of CCOs expect that marketing and communications at their firms will be fully integrated in the next few years. Eight in 10 report extensive collaboration today

Marketing and communications integration is more likely to happen in EMEA than in North America

Marketing and communications in North America and EMEA are similarly collaborative.

If you could focus on only one thing in your role, what would it be?

If you could ask CCOs at other companies one question, what would it be?

| Top 5 question topics | Examples of questions asked by CCOs |
|---|--|
| Measurement | How do we create better measurements to prove the value of the work we do? What dashboards are most useful with data? How do you generate and deliver valuable intelligence to your organization? |
| Challenges/Concerns | What is your vision and key concern at your company? What keeps you up at night? Biggest emerging challenge? |
| Integration or relationships with other departments | How much time do you spend with supervisory board members and how important is their engagement in comparison to executive board members (e.g., Chairman vs CEO)? How have you integrated PR, Marketing and social media to market to your customers? How do you manage to integrate and align data, digital, marketing, and communications? |
| Budget/Resources | Which area in the communications department will increase in budget for the next 3 years? What does your annual strategic planning/budget process entail? How much do you invest (time & resources) in long-term plans? |
| Structure | Do you have direct responsibility and reporting lines for all communications functions everywhere in the globe? How are you structuring your organization for the future? |

We asked this as an open-ended question and categorized responses by topic. The topics listed in the table above appeared in at least five respondent answers.
